Proposes U.S. "Lend-Lease" Of 5,000 Skilled Visitors

A human "lend-lease" of 5,000 or more skilled Americans to the State of Israel will be proposed by Dr. Samuel Wohl, veteran Cincinnati Zionist and rabbi of the Isaac M. Wise Temple, to the meeting of the National Assembly for Labor Israel in New York, on December 16. During his visit to Israel last summer, Dr. Wohl said, he outlined the plan to several Israeli leaders who reacted favorably.

"This plan would serve Israel more tangibly than money serves her," Dr. Wohl said here. "The arrangement would establish a two-way passage for the interchange of culture and ability; would strengthen American ideas in Israel; would show American democracy at work in Israel. The arrangement also would lift United Jewish Appeal contributions from the level of mere money-giving to something more durable and more valuable."

Dr. Wohl proposed that the 5,000 skilled Americans — as well as persons from other democracies — remain in Israel one year, then return home unless any of them wished to extend their service. A new group of 5,000 persons would go from the United States to Israel each year. They would include physicians, attorneys, engineers, welfare workers and others.

"Money is not enough," Dr. Wohl said. "A link must be forged with Israel by English-speaking countries by means of the loan of able persons. Israel needs these 5,000 individuals annually — not as permanent settlers but as special visitors to be organized on the basis of service they can render to the new state."

Most of the 5,000 individuals would be sought among the larger American cities in the manner by which United Jewish Appeal funds are allocated among those cities. In addition, he said, some "key men" would be asked to serve

Attorney Revived Horse Racing In Chicago

Albert Sabath, widely known Chicago attorney, sportsman, and owner of the famous racehorse Alsab, died of a heart ailment in his apartment at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, in Philadelphia, Pa. He was 57 years old. With his son, Dan, Mr. Sabath checked in at the hotel with the intention of attending the world series and the racetrack meet at near-by Garden State Park.

Mr. Sabath, who was the son of Chicago Superior Court Judge Joseph Sabath, and a nephew of U.S. Representative A. J. Sabath, Democrat, of Illinois, was at one time president of the Chicago Businessmen's Racing Association, which formerly operated the Hawthorne race track. Alsab, the 1941 wonder colt, was purchased by Mr. Sabath for only $700. In two years the horse's winnings ran to $345,165. Before being returned to stud at the age of 5, Alsab had won extravagant praise. He beat the great Whirlaway at Belmont Park in 1942.

Mr. Sabath was a graduate of the University of Chicago law school and had practiced law since 1910. He was credited with reviving horse racing in Chicago as an attorney for a group of Chicago businessmen who had taken over Hawthorne Race Track back in the nineteen-twenties.

He obtained a court ruling on the legality of oral betting at race tracks and also later a ruling on the legality of the certificate form of wagering which was the modified pari-mutuel betting. Mr. Sabath was a past president of Hawthorne track also had served as president of the International Racing Association.

Besides his parents and uncle, Mr. Sabath leaves his widow, Olive; a daughter, Mrs. Milton Lewis; a son, Harry, manager of his stables; a sister, Mrs. Stella Grollman, and a brother, Milton, an attorney. Albert Sabath maintained homes in suburban Flossmoor and Miami Beach, Fla.

Cited For Promoting Good Relations

The National Conference of Christians and Jews presented an illuminated citation to Louis J. Horowitz, chairman of the Louis J. and Mary E. Horowitz Foundation. The award was "for his outstanding support in promoting better intergroup relations among the religious, racial and national groups of our country."

Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, made the presentation at a luncheon in honor of Mr. Horowitz, given by Bernard F. Gimbel, president of Gimbel Brothers, Inc., in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. A number of industrial, religious and social welfare leaders were present.

"The generous grants of the Louis J. and Mary E. Horowitz Foundation," the citation read, "have helped make possible the Princeton conferences of social scientists and educators, the Intergroup Relations Centers, the Genocide Convention, Research for the Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth, the World Brotherhood organization and other notable philanthropic achievements."

Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, president of the National Conference, was toastmaster. Mr. Gimbel described Mr. Horowitz as "an extraordinary American," whose construction included the Woolworth and Equitable Buildings and the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. He recalled that during World War I Mr. Horowitz assisted Bernard M. Baruch, then chairman of the War Industries Board. Mr. Baruch attended the luncheon.

Dr. Otto Klineberg, of Columbia University, formerly of Montreal, praised Mr. Horowitz for aiding scientific research on intergroup relations. Donald R. Young, general director of the Russell Sage Foundation, emphasized the importance of scientific knowledge of intergroup relations in the functioning of our Army and Navy.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, thanked Mr. Horowitz for his contributions toward the work of the Protestant churches in improving human relations. The Rev. Morris S. Lazaron of Rollins College hailed Mr. Horowitz' contribution to intergroup relations on the college campus.

To Revise U.S. Fund Raising For Israel

A drastic revision of the fund-raising machinery in the U.S. to help solve Israel's serious economic problems was reported from Israel. The most significant development was the disclosure that Henry Montor, director of the United Jewish Appeal, had been invited by the Israeli Government to head a bond drive in America if and when Israel decided to offer such an issue.

Finance Minister Eliezer Kaplan of Israel, in a statement issued in Jerusalem, said that Mr. Montor has been invited "to stand at the head of the intensified drive to mobilize financial resources in accordance with the resolutions of the Jerusalem conference with the leaders of American Jewry which the Government convened at the beginning of September."

Mr. Kaplan will make a special trip to the U.S. to report on his country's economic position to the National Planning Conference for Israel and Jewish Reconstruction which will be held at the Statler Hotel in Washington Oct. 27-29.

It is expected that Mr. Montor will continue as director of the Appeal until next summer when the bulk of the contributions for the 1951 campaign will have been received and will then take charge of the bond effort. Indications were that Dr. Joseph Schwartz, director general of the Joint Distribution Committee, might succeed Mr. Montor as director of the Appeal. At the Committee offices it was said that Dr. Schwartz had not been approached, according to the New York Times.

At the Jerusalem conference last month, Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion told American Jewish leaders that approximately $1,500,000,000 would be needed to absorb 600,000 new immigrants in the next three years. The conference adopted a four-point program calling for an intensification of the United Jewish Appeal campaign, support of an Israel bond drive, a

Plan Settles Families, Makes Areas Defensible

A plan to transform 20,000 immigrant families into self-supporting farmers in four years has been launched by Israeli settlement authorities. The immigrants are being settled in the hills of Galilee and the Jerusalem area. After four years each is expected to have a house, four or five acres of fruit tree orchards, vineyards and vegetable plantations, and some livestock.

Four thousand families, hitherto clothed, fed and supported in immigrant camps by United Jewish Appeal funds, already have been transferred to the new hill colonies. The figure is expected to reach 5,000 by the end of the year.

The immigrants are living in tents. The Jewish National Fund, the Zionist instrument for the purchase and development of land, is employing them in clearing the rock-strewn hills, terracing the slopes, cutting roads through the desolate mountains and planting trees. The Government is building homes for them.

Housing the 20,000 families and keeping the breadwinners employed on development works will be a greater strain on state and Zionist funds than supporting these people in transit camps. But the authorities believe that the advantages of the new program will more than compensate.

Demoralization among the idle immigrants in the camps has become a cause for deep concern, reports the New York Times. Some families have been in the camps for as long as a year. In the tent cities in the hills, former Jewish merchants from the Yemen, Iraq and Eastern Europe find the physical labor back-breaking, but they are heartened by the sight of their own homes going up as they work.

As the land is cleared parcels are being made available to individual families for cultivation. Out of their earnings from Jewish National Fund employment, the immigrants are expected not only to feed and clothe their families, but to buy agricultural equipment, seeds, saplings and livestock.

As time goes on, it is hoped that they will rely less upon employment on development works for their maintenance and more on their own land. When the four years are up, according to the plan, each family will have assets worth $3,000 and will be self-supporting.

In addition to the economic absorption of 20,000 families, who otherwise might continue indefinitely to be a burden on the state and world Jewry, the plan is calculated to make a few hundred

Sees Permanent DP Group Of 30,000

The problem of Jewish displaced persons will be liquidated within the next twelve months, at least in Germany, it was predicted in Paris, France, at a conference of program directors of the American Joint Distribution Committee.

Samuel L. Haber and Harold Trobe, representatives of the committee in Germany and Austria, respectively, said the German and Austrian camps now contained 25,000 displaced persons, a decrease of 18,000 from a year ago. The camps had held as many as 250,000 Jews in the first years after the war.

The two men pointed out that the Committee still would have responsibilities in those two countries after the displaced persons had left, since permanent communities with high percentages of aged and destitute would remain. A community of 20,000 was estimated for Germany, and 10,000 Jews have taken up residence in Vienna.

Mr. Trobe indicated that the wind-up of operations in Austria might take longer than in Germany because of the number of refugees constantly moving into Vienna from Iron Curtain countries. Describing the Austrian capital as a "treadmill," he said 300 new refugees came in each month, replacing older displaced persons who had emigrated to lands of their final settlement. The population of the camps thus remains at the same level, he said.

How the American Joint Distribution Committee, the largest private agency aiding distressed Jews abroad, is helping to put many ailing and physically handicapped persons in North Africa and Israel on the road to better

Chicago Tribune Denies Anti-Semitism But Not In Own Paper

The Jewish community of Chicago was deeply shocked on May 29 by the publication on page one of the Chicago Tribune of an article by its chief Washington correspondent, entitled, "Three Men Called a Government in Themselves," in which on the purported authority of "a person with highest State Department connections" it was alleged that Justice Felix Frankfurter, Senator Herbert H. Lehman, and former Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., constituted a "secret government of the U. S." The article made no charges against Jews as a group, but contained, besides its strong insinuations that three of its most prominent members were of dubious patriotism, incidental smears of other well-known Jewish individuals.

Recognizing that the publication of such a piece in a paper like the Tribune marked a departure almost without precedent from the standards of responsible American journalism, the American Jewish Committee and other Jewish community relations agencies immediately swung into action. Ely Aaron is chairman of Chicago chapter. In negotiations with the Tribune, the AJC was represented by Mr. Aaron. On June 8, he, together with the Chicago heads of the Anti-Defamation League, the American Jewish Congress, and the Jewish Labor Committee, met with the managing editor and other top officials of the newspaper.

Expressing surprise at the construction put on the article by Jewish readers, but acknowledging that the delegates had convinced them that it was indeed subject to such construction, the Tribune spokesman deplored the publication, and gave assurances that it was "an isolated news report, not the start of a series." They also agreed to an exchange of letters for publication in the Anglo-Jewish and Yiddish press. The Tribune has an undeviating policy of never publicly disavowing its reporters. The full text of the joint letter, addressed to the managing editor of the Tribune, by Mr. Aaron and the representatives of the other three Jewish groups, is as follows:

"Dear Mr. Maloney:

"Pursuant to conversations held between us in which we covered all points in the Truhan article, we would like to set forth here what we consider to be the deplorable implications of that article which was, as you will recall, headed: '3 Men Called A Government In Themselves.'

"This article alleges that Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter, Senator Herbert Lehman, and Mr. Henry Morgenthau, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, constitute a 'secret government.'

"The article can be and has been interpreted as employing anti-Semitism for political purposes.

"We do not question the right of any newspaper to express its political philosophy nor do we seek in any way to circumscribe the Tribune's right to criticize indivi-

TO BROADCAST REPORT ON ISRAEL

Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, national chairman of the United Jewish Appeal and an outstanding leader of American Liberal Judaism, who is currently on a visit to Europe and Israel, will deliver a "Report on The Jewish State" in a nationwide broadcast on Sunday, October 22, over the Message Of Israel, the coast-to-coast ABC weekly radio program. Dr. Wise was the first American Jew to enter Germany after Hitler's advent to power in 1933, risking his life to help the German Jewish community rally from the sudden anti-Semitic decrees. Five years later he was appointed by President Roosevelt as delegate to the International Refugee Conference in Switzerland, and has visited the stricken Jewish communities in Europe many times since.

Shortly after his return from Israel, Rabbi Wise will deliver a report on religious life in the Jewish State before more than 2,000 delegates of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, at their biennial convention in Cleveland, Ohio, November 12-16. He will also speak at the laying of the cornerstone of the Union's new Home, the House of Living Judaism, 65th and Fifth Avenue, New York, on Sunday, November 19. It is expected that he will be heard by representatives of more than 420 United States and Canadian Liberal Jewish congregations, of which the UAHC is the parent body. Rabbi of Central Synagogue, New York City, for the past 25 years, Dr. Wise is the son of Rabbi Isaac Meyer Wise, founder of American Reform Judaism. Consultant to the major networks for Jewish religious broadcasts, he founded ABC's Sunday morning Message Of Israel, which he has conducted for the past 18 years as the only national Jewish weekly religious radio broadcast and which is sponsored by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Proposed Legislation Aimed At Child Marriages

BY RABBI JACOB GOLDMAN, OF ISRAEL,
SECRETARY TO CHIEF RABBI ISAAC HALEVY HERZOG

The Government of Israel is proposing legislation aimed at checking abuses connected with child marriage. Not only among the Arabs are there cases which in effect are tantamount to the sale of girls in a form of child slavery but similar, if exceptional, cases have been known to occur among oriental Jewish communities.

The Mandatory Government, mindful perhaps of the ineffectiveness of such legislation in India, was at the best only half hearted in its attempts to deal with this problem. As far as the Jews of Palestine had been concerned, however, the marriage age had been steadily rising due mainly to the Chief Rabbinate refusing to grant marriage licenses to girls below the age of 16 save in extraordinary circumstances when a special Rabbinical Court examined the details of the case.

As long, however, as the civil authorities failed to provide penalties for the offenders, the Rabbinate's independent practice often remained ineffective since Jewish marriages need not necessarily take place before a representative of the rabbinate and are valid and binding even when not accompanied by a license from that body.

The recent influx into Israel of several hundred thousand Jews from countries of the East, where child marriages are the rule, has made the need for effective legislation in banning such marriages all the more urgent. Among the Jews of Yemen, for example, — 40,000 of whom emigrated into Israel during the past nine months — girls often marry at the age of 10 to 12. It not infrequently happens that when you enter the house of a Yemenite and ask a little girl for her mother she will show you her own babies!

While the Knesseth is debating what action to take to remedy this lamentable state of affairs, the Chief Rabbinate of Israel has announced its own impending promulgation of Takkanoth (religious enactments) and a Herem (ban of excommunication) on all who would marry, or perform a marriage, contrary to them. In so doing the Chief Rabbinate would merely be adopting the practice of rabbis of earlier generations.

Already in Talmudic days we find a ruling that a marriage though valid may none the less be deplorable because it took place at too early an age and should be discouraged. (see Kiddushin, 41. Even Haezer Chapter 37, section 8). Mere validity of a marriage does not guarantee its suitableness. Hence rabbis, since Gaonic times, have never hesitated to frame enactments forbidding marriages under certain circumstances. (See Freiman's classic work on Marriage and Betrothal).

Marriage and divorce in Israel are decided by religious law and in respect of Jews are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Rabbinate. Besides the moral power of the herem, which could only be effective among religious Jews, the rabbinate clearly has little means of preventing child marriages and even less of remedying matters once such a marriage has taken place.

Nor can the civil authorities annul such a marriage which is religiously and hence, since in this sphere religious law is the law of the land, civilly valid. Government must therefore confine itself to amending the Criminal Code and increasing the penalties for offenders, which would include rabbis officiating at such marriages. Government, however, could find a way of inducing the parties to such a marriage to dissolve it by "voluntary" divorce, by reducing the penalty in such an eventuality. The Chief Rabbinate has in fact suggested that judges be invested with discretionary power to recommend mercy where divorce is agreed to.

The inducement to such agreement, namely the desire to escape the heavier punishment, would not be considered coercion which in Jewish Law invalidates a divorce. At all events even coercion would be justified where the marriage was originally declared by the Rabbinate to be undesirable since the divorce, from being a mere prerogative of the parties, becomes a duty which may be enforced.

In Talmudic days marriages at a tender age were favored and even considered praiseworthy. The Chief Rabbinate has now set the minimum marriage age at 16 years and a day, considering earlier marriages today as immature and detrimental to the health of both mother and offspring. A string of Poskim could be quoted who took recognition in their days of such a "nishtana haeetim" (a change of time) which showed itself in the deterioration of the hardiness of later generations. (see especially Magen Avraham, Chapter 576).

Rabbi Yehuda Hahasid in his Ethical Will cautions his community against continuing the practice of early marriages. "Although our ancient sages declare that it is meritorious to marry early, allowances must be made for the change in the health of present day people. Our generation is a weak one and we cannot be expected to marry at so early an age as did our hardy fore-fathers." (see Beer Haytayv, Even Haezer, Chapter 1, Para. 2.)

This article is from The Jewish Horizon.

U.S. armed forces have asked the Jewish community to recruit 39 additional Jewish chaplains by January 1, 1951, and approximately 53 more by July 1, 1951. There will be approximately 110 Jewish chaplains on duty by July 1, 1951. Announcement of this quota was made by the Jewish Welfare Board Division of Religious Activities, the government-authorized agency for recruiting, endorsing and serving Jewish chaplains, in a communication to the heads of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, Rabbinical Assembly of America and Rabbinical Council of America. Of the 89 chaplains needed by the end of 1950, four will enter the Navy; eight, in the Air Force; and 27 in the Army. If the young rabbis of America fail to offer themselves in sufficient numbers, it will then be necessary to recall to active duty older chaplains who, after serving in World War II, maintained their military connections by remaining in the Reserves.

The Department of National Health and Welfare says that children need plenty of freedom for open-air games and sports. They need to run, jump, skip, and climb if their bodies are to develop healthfully and their minds normally.

Religious Education Needs A New Look

BY ROSE HENRIQUES, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, DIRECTOR OF THE JEWISH RESEARCH UNIT

Many hitherto unscheduled facts have come to light in the course of the first scrutiny of the Survey of Jewish Interests. Of these facts, those showing, for instance, the proportion of people keeping this or that custom, or who are interested in a particular aspect of Jewish learning, provide information, but do not indicate a need for any sort of action as a result of our knowledge of them. There are, however, "states of affairs" to be considered, some of which definitely call for action to deal with the situations they reveal.

Trenchant as are the matters concerning the adults, the section dealing with their children is by far the more important, for the future of Judaism lies in the hands of these boys and girls and others like them; and the answers to questions regarding them are, partly, very disquieting. It is bad enough to find that nearly one third of the adults consider their own religious education to have been inadequate, but worse is the fact that the parents of one-fifth of the children dealt with are dissatisfied with the religious education of their children.

With the varied means of religious teaching now available for children of all shades of religious upbringing, it seems appalling that there is, even among the comparatively small number dealt with in the Survey, so large a proportion of unsatisfactory results of religious instruction. When this number is applied relatively to the entire Anglo-Jewish community the total figure is startling, to say the least.

Besides the children with inadequate religious teaching there is an appreciable number who seem to get no religious education at all. Further scrutiny will show whether these are the children whose parents do not belong to any synagogue, or whether they are members of a congregation but do not take advantage of the facilities that exist for the training of their children.

The number of adolescents continuing their religious education after bar-mitzvah or confirmation is lamentably small (under one third of those who have been bar-mitzvah or confirmed). This shows that parents make a vast difference in their estimate of the relative importance of religious and secular education, for although most parents would strongly object to their children ceasing education after their thirteenth birthday, there appears to be apathy regarding the spiritual aspect of the children's training.

It is possible to ascertain whether the parents who are dissatisfied with their children's education belong to the Orthodox or the Progressive communities, so that the relevant education authority will be able to grapple with the specific problem as applied to its own religion classes. When the pedagogues have evolved a curriculum interesting enough to appeal to the average adolescent, so that he or she really wants to continue study after the milestone of bar-mitzvah or confirmation has been passed, a great step in the right direction will have been taken. That there is an appreciable number of young people who do pursue their studies is not denied, but the majority of young Jews, it would seem, are not in this category.

How can we encourage them to enlarge their knowledge of their faith? How can sufficient "thrill" be imparted to the subject to make it as as much a "best seller" as, say, a book on sex education? It is absolutely necessary to arouse in them an interest for something they feel can be applied to their lives in an essential capacity. Until the eternal truths, with the spiritual satisfaction gained therefrom, and the historical sequence, with the resultant ethical and functional laws of our religion can be presented to modern youth in so attractive a manner as to arouse a desire to identify them with themselves, they will continue to look upon their religious instruction as a bothersome "extra" to an overfull scholastic programme, the study of which, they think, will not materially assist their careers and the manifestation of which in their homes or at a service, which they do not understand, merely bores them.

If the right approach can be found to integrate religion into their lives, if the whole of the teaching hangs together, its various subjects being so linked as to form an interesting and intriguing whole, there may be some chance that youth will "see the object of it all," because nowadays one so often hears them say that they do not. They have to put religion into their list of likes and interests, otherwise the losing battle will continue. To-day more and more young people, seeking spiritual outlet, give their finest spiritual loyalties to such political and other wordly enthusiasms as are taking the place of religion with so many people.

The numbers who, amongst the young, love and increase their religious life are to be admired, but for the far larger number who have not this natural affinity for matters religious, a spiritual "new look," both in teaching and in

Do You Serve Soup at "MILCHIG" Meals?

131 housewives did and 85 voted HEINZ their top flavour favourite

When a group of average housewives in a typical small Canadian city were asked to make a "blindfold" test of two leading brands of Cream of Tomato Soup, the result was overwhelmingly in favour of Heinz.

Of course, the women were not actually blindfolded, but they were served two bowls of heated Cream of Tomato Soup that were identified only by the letters A and B, and asked to write down the brand they preferred. Nearly 65 per cent voted Heinz FIRST for flavour. Less than 35 percent voted for another well-known brand, with one lone lady registering no choice.

Here are a few of the comments made by another group of women when asked their opinion of Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup:

- "It's No. 1 soup in our home."
- "No other competes with it."
- "Have always preferred Heinz because the flavour is definitely superior."
- "Heinz tomato flavour is truer."

Try this taste test on your own family. Heat a tin of Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup and a tin of any other brand. Serve half-helpings of each and get your family's verdict, when they have tasted the wonderful difference. Chances are it will be two to one for Heinz.

If you have been buying some other brand for any reason, try Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup just ONCE. It will be the beginning of a long friendship. Taste will tell!

Judaism For Everyday Living

BY HANNAH L. GOLDBERG

"Jewish youth to-day is confused and perplexed," declared Dr. Max Kadushin, principal of the Hebrew High School of Greater New York (Marshalliah). "That is true," he continued, "of most young people to-day, regardless of religious affiliation, economic status, race or colour. And why not? They are confronted with a world torn by conflict and obsessed by fear, a world that has achieved miracles in applied science and is at a loss to find a solution of its most elementary human problems. Jewish youth, in addition to the problems they share with all youth, labour under the special handicap of minority status aggravated in the case of their people by anti-Semitism. Moreover, they lack a personal morality based on a personal view of the world. With conventions lax and social pressure weak, only warmly felt convictions can inspire morality and self-discipline."

This observation is, of course, not new. It has been made often by educators, sociologists, psychologists. Many attempts have been made to wrestle with the problem of the relation of Jewish youth to the Jewish tradition. Dr. Kadushin, noted rabbi and educator, principal of the High School for the past eight years and formerly associated with the Hillel Foundations, believes that he has found a method which will help our young people develop a healthy orientation to life, an outlook that will, in fact, assist them in facing all human relationships.

"What our youth need," he said, "is a pattern of values that will give them inner security and wholesome satisfaction. Our youth need ideals that can be employed in public and in private conduct. They need concepts that interpret life and render it worth-while. These values are all found in Judaism and it is our job to identify, interpret and apply these values to everyday living. Only in this way will Judaism command the loyalty and devotion of Jewish youth."

Impressed by what Dr. Kadushin asserted, I was eager to learn how he, who has worked directly with Jewish youth for many years, has applied his method in his own teaching experience.

The Hebrew School of Greater New York is the largest Hebrew high school in the country. It has eighteen branches with a total of forty-two classes operating in various parts of the New York area, from West Bronx to Coney Island. In these classes over 500 students, girls and boys, receive their Jewish education. They come after a full day in the public high school since the Hebrew High School is supplemental to and not a substitute for a public school.

The pupils are drawn from many different neighbourhoods, from varied economic and social backgrounds. They differ, also, in the level of preparation for the school. Many students obtained their elementary Jewish education in community Talmud Torahs, others attended congregational schools, and a few studied in all-day Jewish schools or Yeshivot. Those whose training is inadequate take a preparatory, or Mekhinah course. In this course as well as in the Alef (first year) classes, instruction is seven hours per week. In the three higher classes, instruction is nine hours per week. This adds quite a load to the already heavily burdened high school student.

"Do you hold your students?" I asked Dr. Kadushin.

"Once they get through the Alef class, as a general rule they stay with us," he replied. "But it is true that the child must have the energy and the strength to meet the requirements. Intellectual capacity and will are not always sufficient. We have found that the youngster comes to look forward to his hours with us almost as a relaxation, certainly as time well spent. Gradually, almost imperceptibly, he begins to appreciate that he needs the Hebrew High School to help him meet the challenge of life in our times. And throughout the period of his association with the school, his devotion to and understanding of his great heritage increases."

I learned that every subject in the curriculum is so organised and so taught as to emphasise the primary objective of the pedagogic method — the teaching of Jewish values. In the third and fourth years, regular courses in specific Jewish values are given and all the teaching is directed toward the application of these values to personal living.

In all the courses of study, Jewish religious classic texts are utilised. Students read, study and analyse Pentateuch with the commentary of Rashi, the Former Prophets, the Latter Prophets, Ketubim (which includes among other writings Psalms, Proverbs, the Megillot), Jewish history, modern Hebrew literature. The students are introduced to present day life in Israel, and are made familiar with Israel's people, institutions and problems. For extra-curricular study, students are required to read selected Hebrew books and Hebrew newspapers for youth. Naturally, knowledge of the Hebrew language is fundamental.

Dr. Kadushin maintains that the valuational approach not only distinguishes this school from others but, in addition, prepares the students for active participation in American Jewish life. Since the Jewish value, when discussed, is always illustrated and explained in relation to the student's personal life, study becomes a labour of love and a source of inspiration.

What are values? They are ideals which may be expressed either affirmatively like Kiddush ha Shem or negatively like Hillul ha Shem. These ideals pertain to all phases of human life and invade all areas of human relations. According to Dr. Kadushin, these values or value terms, as he calls them, are contained in rabbinic literature: the Midrash, the Aggadah, the Talmud, and are identified in one-name terms given to them by the Rabbis. These values, once adopted, have the power to make of life a stirring adventure filled with richness and warmth. Some of these values are: Teshuvah, Malkhut Shamayim, Tefillah, Hasid, Torah, Mitzvah, Tzedakah, Tsadik, Derekh Eretz, Rasha. (An approximate translation of these value terms is: Repentance, the Kingship of Heaven, Prayer, the Pious Man, Torah, Commandment, Love, the Righteous Man, Ethical Conduct, the Wicked Man.) All of these grew out of the experience of the Jewish people, were crystallised by the folk and have each its own name or symbol.

When I questioned Dr. Kadushin about the Biblical origin of these values, he answered: Rabbinic literature is a development of the Bible and there is a continuing connecting thread between the Prophets and their values and values found in the rabbinic teachings. Rabbinic teaching is, in fact, an evolution of the prophetic ideals. Dr. Kadushin insists that rabbinic literature has, in fact, been Israel's great contribution to Western civilisation and not the Bible as most of us commonly believe.

"The ideas inherent in rabbinic teaching form the major Jewish element in Christianity and Mohammedanism. Furthermore, the fact that this great body of rabbinic literature exists, is the surest indication that Judaism did not end with the Bible but continued and still continues to develop. The value terms are not translatable," said Dr. Kadushin. "They have no real equivalent in any other language. Words like 'door,' 'chair,' 'table,' have a definite meaning that will carry over into any language. But since the value terms are symbols for ideas and attitudes that are embodied in the teaching of the Rabbis and, also, because they form the largest part of the spiritual experience of the Jewish people, their meaning becomes distorted when not viewed in the orbit of that experience."

"No other people has shared in the struggles of the Jewish people to fulfil its destiny. No other people has had the same experience. Therefore, the value takes on a different colouration when it is expressed in another language or when it is related to a different experience." He illustrated with the Jewish value, "Malkhut Shamayim." In Christianity this term becomes "Kingdom of Heaven," a blessed future state. Its original Jewish connotation is "God's Kingship," meaning His rule over the world and our lives to-day and always.

Since, according to this theory, the value terms are not translatable, it follows inevitably that they can be explained and their validation delineated only in the Hebrew language.

"We teach the Hebrew language," he said, "because it unlocks the treasures of our great literature, because it is the language of our forefathers, because it is the spoken tongue of Medinat Yisrael. But in our school we must use Hebrew as the language of instruction because we are unable otherwise to interpret the values which should form the pattern of Jewish living."

Not only can these value terms not be translated, they cannot be defined as we are accustomed to think of definition, asserts Dr. Kadushin. The Rabbinic value term conveys an idea, but not a complete, not a fully formulated idea. But to define a value term is to present it as complete, it is to distort its character. Thus the Rabbinic value-terms are undefined concepts.

Dr. Kadushin used the word democracy as an illustration. Democracy is a value term; it is a value-concept that is deeply embedded in numerous American institutions. A general idea of the meaning of the concept democracy is shared by most Americans. And yet, ask any one of five people for a definition of democracy, and you will have five different definitions. The value term, democracy, is not defined nor is it definable, yet the concept in which the value is contained is general enough to be shared by a large group.

Since the concepts in which the values are expressed are dynamic, they cannot be organised into a static system. Yet, when used in speech and action, their interrelationship can be demonstrated and it is thus possible to recognise a coherence among them, these value-concepts forming a mental or ideational organism. For example, justice and charity are interrelated ideas but involved in these ideas are always many others: Torah, God's love or any combination of any of the value-concepts. Like parts of any organism, they cannot be cut off from each other and there is no logical necessity that makes any of them more closely related to each other than to any other Rabbinical value.

Identification and application of Jewish values to present day living furnish the student with ideals to which he can cling, with goals that enlarge his vision and help to shape his character. He develops a healthy attitude toward his tradition and in turn toward life. He begins to think in personal terms — how does this value affect me? What does it teach me about my relation with my neighbour? Am I indeed embodying Kiddush ha Shem or Tsedakah or Torah in my life? And out of all this questioning and exploring for answers, grows the student's basic attitude towards himself and his fellowman — a behaviour pattern based upon the determination to employ in actual living those values that he has been taught are the basic ingredients of the Jewish tradition, and of a positive religious outlook on life.

One question had been forming in my mind throughout the interview. I was favourably impressed by the method. I had seen some of the writings of the students collected in their year book, and thus I had concrete evidence of the efficacy of this approach. But, what about the American environment? Would this emphasis of Jewish values somehow put the student out of gear with the dominant civilisation in which he was living?

"Quite the opposite," declared Dr. Kadushin, emphatically, warming to his subject even more than previously. "In America, religious teaching is supplemental to the public school. It becomes a matter of home, church, synagogue, or special institutional training. The valuational method, instead of separating our students from their fellow Americans, brings them closer because our students apply the valuational method to American civilisation. They recognise values in American democracy that are often overlooked by or unknown to even the most loyal democrat. Because they understand the fundamentals of democracy, they discover its value-concepts and express these concepts in action.

"The more value the student finds in America, the richer is his life and the larger the canvas upon which his life is drawn. Let me illustrate. Our students have been given thorough drilling in the concretisation of the value term 'Hillul practice, must be evolved. It is the task of the professional teachers, the learned men and the Rabbis of all the various groups within the community, to find an acceptable presentation of the ageless beauties of our faith for those who cannot reconcile them, as they are now taught (or not taught) with their outlook on life to-day. It is not for the layman to venture into this field, but it certainly is for those laymen and women who come into contact with the results of the ill-taught and consequently unloved religious instruction that exists as chaos in the minds of so many of our boys and girls, to put the need for a fresh type of religious instruction before the people who are qualified to produce it.

If this widespread command problem really exercises the minds of the heads of the various communities within Anglo-Jewry, mighty conferences of Rabbis, Ministers and teachers of all sections and shades of Jewish thought should take place. At these, ideas for modernising the methods of religious education could be pooled, and schemes evolved for a new approach to the subject.

The parental duty to give children a firm faith that they understand and love, to make the home the place where the children see all that is so characteristically lovely in our religion carried out with whatever degree of "Frommness" the parents themselves believe in, is no less binding if the education authorities also co-operate by looking upon the needs of modern youth through modernising classes and supplying what some parents are unable to produce.

I have known many young persons break away entirely from a very Orthodox upbringing which, they have said, either became impossible to carry out under present-day conditions, or, they have decided, does not appeal to them, or which they did not properly understand. But I have also known young people, and adults too, who say bitterly, "Why have these lovely customs not been taught me by my parents? Why have I been brought up so ignorant of my own religion?" These people are desirous of entering more fully into Jewish religious life, although apprehensive lest too much be asked of them: they feel embarrassed and ignorant in Jewish circles.

If we are to give the children a reasonable and true picture, at the appropriate age, of the community to which they are told they belong and in which they are to grow up and prosper spiritually, they must be allowed to realize that overall membership of the Jewish community covers sundry interpretations of the laws and principles of their faith. This will allow them to learn to permit freedom of thought to others, whilst remaining in the religious pigeon-hole of their own family tradition.

Between the two extreme examples quoted there are many degrees of dissatisfaction and a good many of apathy on the part of youngsters whose parents, although never denying that they are Jews, have not taken any part in communal life and have not carried out any religious practice at home or in synagogue. For the person of later adolescence with genuine religious doubts who has entered a sphere of life in which he or she is unable or unwilling to continue in the same religious section as hitherto, there should be means of getting to know more deeply the religious content of the other groups within the community. This is important, so that no one should feel that, because he is not remaining constant to his early manner of religious observance, there is no place for him within the fold.

We must face facts. We have to look forward to a next generation of young Jews and Jewesses, many of whom are children of very Orthodox parents and who have thrown everything overboard: some are children of "Jews by name only" many of whom have intermarried and brought up their children as nothing at all, or else say that they can choose when they are grown up. There is a fairly large number of what one could class as 'medium orthodox, on paper," who do not keep kasher diet and many of whom work on Sabbath: smaller numbers of very Orthodox people who adhere strictly to all the rules and a similar number of genuine conforming Progressives. There is, however, a vast number of wishy-washy "nothing in particulars," who like Matza balls, go to synagogue on the High Festivals and talk tall about the increase of anti-Semitism. A generation of youth of this admixture is not a very comforting prospect. It is indeed a challenge to religious authorities.

I feel that many more would remain Orthodox if modern habits and inventions, such as electric light, public vehicles, telephone, the high glaze on modern pottery and pans, modern methods of milking, the hygiene of the catering establishment, etc. were taken into consideration in connection with the desecration of the Sabbath and eating outside the home. Similarly, many Progressives who gradually drift away from all contact with Jewish circles and usage would have remained more actively Jewish if there were more of the traditional customs, tunes and ceremonies used, both in the Progressive synagogues and in the home, so that the religious sentimental basis of their childhood could form a lasting tie with communal life.

If there is, amongst the clergy and leaders of Anglo-Jewry, a spirit of "Pray and let pray"—if one can term a spirit of respect for the religious views and habits of co-religionists who differ from one's own way of thinking on religious matters—it will enable them to thresh out this difficult problem to a constructive solution. Eventually such good-will will filter down the ranks and reach the children, and will enable them to realize the full strength of the denomination to which they belong. If such respect among people who care for religious education makes them produce a teaching that will capture the minds, imaginations and the hearts of the post-war generation of boys and girls, they will have given fresh life to the religion of our fathers.

The Problem Of Cultural Adjustment Of Individuals In Israel

BY DR. RAPHAEL PATAI, PROFESSOR OF ANTHROPOLOGY IN THE INSTITUTE FOR ISRAEL AND THE MIDDLE EAST, OF THE DROPSIE COLLEGE, IN PHILADELPHIA, PA.

One of the greatest long-range problems facing the government and people of Israel is that of the cultural adjustment of large Oriental Jewish groups to the modern Western socio-cultural scene of Israel. Thousands of Jews from Yemen, Iraq, Algiers, Morocco and other Asiatic and African countries have already migrated to Israel; other thousands are coming annually. To the perplexity of the problems of socio cultural adjustment, one must also add the fact of the diversity of the backgrounds of the recent emigrants from Europe and the tragic nature of the recent backgrounds of the majority of them.

This unprecedented influx of immigrants from Europe, Asia and Africa to Israel turns the country into a veritable laboratory for social studies. Never before has there been such an opportunity to witness and study acculturative processes of such dynamic intensity among two population groups — Western and Oriental Jews — rapidly approaching equality in numbers. Aside from the scientific lessons to be learned from such studies, there is the practical contribution that can be made to the development of Israel if we can devise techniques to speed up the adjustment process and if we can prevent the development of prejudices and tensions that cannot help but impede the happy growth and development of Israel.

It is to these problems that The Dropsie College of Philadelphia addressed itself when it announced this summer the creation of a Field Station in Israel as a part of its Institute for Israel and the Middle East. This Field Station will use the kibbutz (communal settlement) of Ein Harod in northern Israel as its base of operations during the first year of its work. It is hoped that the results of our modest first year research project will be of immediate practical value for the inhabitants of Ein Harod, and for other kibbutzim throughout Israel. One of the problems, for instance, which the kibbutzim in Israel have to contend with is that of adjustment of the individual to the communal life-forms characteristic of the kibbutz. Usually a new member is admitted only for a probationary period of six months or one year, and after this time is up, a vote is taken to determine whether he is to be admitted to permanent membership.

The exclusion of newcomers from a kibbutz, after they have been there for six months or a year, or the voluntary resignation of prospective members because they could not adjust themselves to the life, often causes severe disturbances in the life of the person excluded, and also is an economic loss to both the community and the individual. With the present heavy influx of new immigrants this problem tends to assume even larger dimensions. It is our hope that the Field Station will be able to devise a technique that will make it possible for us to better evaluate the chances of an individual making a successful adjustment in a kibbutz. In this way, heartbreak of individuals will be avoided, and the kibbutz can maintain a higher degree of harmony and efficiency.

Our Field Station workers would carry out such a research project in accordance with the most modern and best known sociological and anthropological techniques. They would conduct a survey, using both a carefully prepared questionnaire as well as direct personal interviews, to ascertain the differential degrees of adjustment reached by members of the settlement. The results would then be broken down according to various criteria, such as country of origin, previous occupation, age-groups, time spent in the kibbutz and other such factors.

At the same time, qualified Field Station workers would administer projective psychological tests to the individuals making up the settlement to ascertain the various psychological and character types represented in the membership of the kibbutz. The results of the two types of surveys would then be collated to find out what, if any, correlation exists between certain personality types and the degree of adjustment attained in Kibbutz life.

If successful, the results of investigations of this type could be used to predict with a reasonable certainty the probability of successful adjustment to kibbutz life of the individual immigrant. The successful use of such a projective test would save both the individual and the kibbutz much waste in the expenditure of human energy and time, and prevent much friction and unhappiness. Similar methods could be developed and utilized for a wider study of vocational adaptation. In this way, scientific study could replace the present wasteful trial and error devices by which candidates for kibbutz life are now chosen.

This is but a single example of the ways in which the new Field Station project of The Dropsie College's Institute for Israel and the Middle East can make a real contribution to the development of Israel as well as conduct scientific studies that will add to the general store of the world's knowledge. Anthropology is only beginning to be properly utilized by academic institutions concerned with education in the so-called area-studies. In this use of anthropology — which the United States Department is now making available to Foreign Service personnel and candidates — a new factor is being added to the training of American men and women in a real understanding of the important world-area of the Middle East. Perhaps through such understanding, a contribution will be made to the keeping of the peace in this area which has long been regarded as a tinder-box. At least, that is the hope of The Dropsie College.

CLASS IN COOKERY

three and one-half cups cake flour four level teaspoons baking powder
one and one-half cups sugar four eggs, separated one-half lemon, grated rind and juice
one-quarter pound butter
one cup sour cream mixed with one-quarter teaspoon baking soda pinch of salt, added to whites of eggs, before beating one-half cup walnuts, cut into small pieces
one teaspoon vanilla

Cream together butter and sugar. Add yolks of eggs one at a time, mixing thoroughly. Add cream gradually, then vanilla, lemon rind and juice. Sift flour with baking powder two or three times; add gradually to mixture. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites and add nuts. Note: This recipe makes one very large cake; if desired, two pie plates may be used instead of a large cake pan. Before placing in oven to bake, trim with the following:

Cake Topping

one teaspoon butter
two teaspoons sugar
one-half teaspoon cinnamon
one tablespoon flour

Mix ingredients in a bowl and spread evenly over the cake.

Note: This cake should be baked at 400 degrees for ten minutes; then, reducing heat to 350 bake for approximately another thirty minutes until it is brown in colour and bake-tested with wire or toothpick.

Mrs. A. Klein,
5216 Hutchison Street, Montreal.

LEMON PIE

three cups flour
one teaspoon salt
ice water
one cup shortening
one egg
three tablespoons lemon juice

Blend flour, salt, and shortening together, and add the lemon juice and egg, then add three or four tablespoons of ice cold water. Bake in hot oven, 450 degrees for fifteen minutes. This makes three pie shells.

Filling

one cup water
three quarters cup sugar
one teaspoon grated lemon rind
one-quarter teaspoon salt

Bring to boil. Mix five tablespoons corn starch, slowly with one-half cup cold water, add to mixture, stir until thickened. Add two egg yolks and blend well, then stir in two tablespoons butter and six tablespoons lemon juice.

Meringue

Beat two egg whites until mixture stands in peaks, then add one teaspoon lemon juice and four tablespoons sugar, gradually, and beat until thick. Spread over filling in baked pie shell. Bake in moderate oven, 325 degrees, for fifteen minutes, turn off oven, open door slightly, and let stay in oven till cool. This keeps meringue from falling.

ha Shem' (desecration of the Name). They apply these ideas to actual situations in American life: to exploit a man, to discriminate against him, to treat him as an inferior breed, is a desecration of the Name. It becomes no longer a matter of repeating 'equality' as an empty phrase. It is necessary to live the concept 'equality,' to strive to concretise it in daily living and in every relationship."

Before I could question Dr. Kadushin about the difficulties inherent in this approach, he mentioned some of them. The students must have the will to live according to these values. They need the energy to continue the four year course. They must be interested in attending the school in the first place.

"We need new texts that lend themselves to this method," he said. "We have to write our own. But it takes much time and much investigation. We have created texts and use them in mimeograph form, but that is not good enough. Teachers, who will have the capacity, the ability, the preparation, and above all, the faith in this method are not easy to obtain. When they are found," said Dr. Kadushin, "they are priceless."

He demands of his teachers a modern academic training, an excellent Hebrew background, complete familiarity with Rabbinic texts, ability to engage in and to utilise the results of research, and sheer teaching competence and personality. The teacher must have a profound inner conviction that teaching Jewish values is the surest way to obtain pedagogic results.

Dr. Kadushin has managed to communicate his own deep-seated confidence to his teachers. He meets with them regularly. He requires them to engage in constant reading and when they come together to discuss what has been read. He helps them in making study plans, watches them teach, offers critiques. He encourages and stimulates them to greater and greater effort. The result is the development of a few teachers who are outstanding in the profession and who look upon their work as a motivating force in life.

"Only the spade work has been done," he declared. Many values still remain to be identified. So far even a complete list of the value concepts does not exist. They must be found through constant research. But a promising beginning has been made. "With the adherence of Jewish survivalists, with the cooperation of those who are seeking the desiderata for continuing Jewish life in the Diaspora, the promise of our beginning can be realised."

and when it is started; encouragement of the flow of investment capital to Israel, and efforts to obtain United States grants-in-aid to Israel as a means of "strengthening the only forces of freedom in the Middle East."

The appeal, it was unanimously agreed, must spearhead the raising of money to meet Jewish needs. Of the $1,500,000,000, the Government is expected to provide $600,000,000 and the remainder must be obtained in the U.S.

Information about Travel Funds

New regulations covering travel funds were announced by the Minister of Finance on Wednesday, October 4th.

The main point to remember is that Canadian residents require Form H Permit to take out of Canada more than $50 U.S. or more than $100 of Canadian and U.S. currencies combined. Form H Permits will continue to be available at banks.

The regulation covering the use of Form H for the export of currency is a safeguard against the export of capital sums where such export would not be permitted through other channels.

Authority has been given to banks and other agents of the Foreign Exchange Control Board to approve applications for U.S. travel funds without reference to the Board for amounts up to:

1. $500 per trip for bona fide business travel.
2. $500 per person in the calendar year for other travel.
3. $2,000 Canadian per year, or its equivalent, for attendance during a full academic year at a university, college or boarding school in the United States.

Applications in excess of these amounts may be referred to the Board and will be approved for reasonable amounts, having regard to the duration of the proposed journeys.

Border Travel.—Individuals may obtain up to $50 U.S. in any calendar month for use on a trip to the United States where the applicant will not be taking out of Canada more than a total of $100, of which not more than $50 is in U.S. funds.

Where Jews and Christians Meet

For centuries mutual suspicion characterized the relationship between Jew and Christian. Few were the brave noble spirits on either wide who ventured to call for understanding between the adherents of the church and the adherents of the synagogue. Only within modern times, with the help of the searchlight of science and the stimulus provided by the study of comparative religion, have there arisen groups and organizations and movements with the purpose of building good-will between Jew and Christian.

For the seeker of truth there are definite regions where Jew and Christian do meet. Surely, Jews and Christians meet in worship of One God. I cannot explain why unto the Jew was assigned the mission of the discovery of the monotheism. This belongs in the realm of mystery. But the fact remains that Jewish genius has proclaimed this revelation to humanity, and the battle cry of the Jew throughout the ages of: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One" has been heard around the world. This dogma of the Jew has become equally precious to the Christian.

Yes, the fundamentalist within the church may speak of his God concept as a trinity, but the emphasis is still on the three in One! And the corollary of the One Father is the One Humanity. Upon this concept of ethical monotheism hinges the hope of civilization. It was therefore clear that when Hitler attacked Judaism, he was bound ultimately to war upon Christianity. For the God of the Jew is truly the God of the Christian. Our source is one, even as our destiny is one.

Jew and Christian meet in obedience to God's moral law. Church and synagogue must now, especially in this atomic age, do all to make God's moral law reign supreme. In our individual lives, in national life, and in international life must there be ethical conduct and the pursuit of righteousness. Otherwise, there is no purpose and no hope for man in this atomic age. Man, if he is not disciplined by morality, will "bomb" himself out of existence and civilization will destroy itself.

Jew and Christian, of course, historically meet in the synagogue. What is the church but a synagogue? The Nazarene, who is the foundation of the Christian church, studied in the synagogue and later preached and taught in the synagogue. The form of worship within the church has been taken from the synagogue. Surely, the Bible was given by the Jew to the Christian; and with it the Psalms, the greatest book of hymnology. The great chants of the church were borrowed from the synagogue. It should be commonplace, therefore, for Jew and Christian to worship together. For the informed Jew the hope of Isaiah is a fervent prayer: "My house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples."

In our day, Jew and Christian have united in the war against the neo-paganism which threatened the Judaeo-Christian conception of life. Bloody has been the struggle. Millions bled and died to wrest victory from the Nazis and Fascists. But where do we go from victory? Now Jew and Christian must be united in the battle for world peace! Otherwise the sacrifice of millions shall prove in vain. We must unite in the building of a warless society and in the establishment of world government. Absolute national sovereignty is outmoded in this new age. Now church and synagogue must bring home to men and nations that brotherhood is no longer a matter of good-will but a desperate necessity.

What can save us from the hell of the atomic bomb is the discipline of religion so that atomic energy may be used to bless mankind, to ease the burdens of humanity. Alas, there is a vast psychological space which separates the people who have suffered directly in this war from the non-suffering populations of the earth. We must develop increased sympathy and compassion for those who experienced the war tragedy and war sacrifice and through their martyrdom have become spiritually ennobled. In these post-war days Jews and Christians must guard against peace being sabotaged and the sabotaging of post-war experiments in social betterment.

Let Jew and Christian meet wholeheartedly and sincerely to advance the cause of humanity and thus prove the worthwhileness of religion which calls upon us all: "... and thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

duals in public life regardless of their race, color or creed.

"The concern of the Jewish community in this instance stems from the fact that the article appears to follow the recognized propaganda pattern originated by the diabolical genius of Goebbels of Nazi Germany and emulated by the leading anti-Semites in this country. The technique of associating exclusively Jewish names regardless of the relevancy of such association is an old one in propaganda. The practice of anti-Semites in associating Communism and Zionism so as to evaluate one with the other is well known; and their shabby though lurid references to mysterious deaths and suicides as the concomitant of too much knowledge of secret influence in government has been worn threadbare.

"The gruesome implications of these methods have shocked the Jewish community when they have been utilized in the cheap circles of racketeer anti-Semitism. It is the more shocking when parallels appear in the Chicago Tribune for then they have about them the cloak of respectability.

"The undersigned organizations, representing a very large portion of the Jewish community of Chicago, are profoundly concerned by this article. They are deeply disturbed over the possibility that this article may not stand alone but may be intended as a springboard for a series of similar character. Resulting from the clarification made possible by our meeting with you and Mr. Campbell we realize that the implications of this article were not understood by you at the time of its publication.

"We should be glad to have your complete assurances, — which you said you were to give, — that the unfortunate implications of this article were not intended by the Tribune."

The following is the reply of J. Loy Maloney, the editor of the Chicago Tribune,:

"Gentlemen:

"Let me express my appreciation for the time and factual material which you have given me in discussing the Tribune article of May 29. This information will prove most valuable to me. In its light I can understand how the article in question proved disturbing to those of Jewish faith whom you represent.

"The article was an isolated news report; not the start of series. It dealt with Justice Frankfurter, Mr. Morgenthau, and Senator Lehman as public men, regardless of their religious beliefs. The story was not meant to imply any association or parallelism between Zionism and Communism.

"The Tribune is not anti-Semitic. Its record has been that of a defender of minorities when they were right, however unpopular their cause.

"I have told you that the Tribune in printing the article did not foresee the interpretations which, you pointed out, have been put upon it in Jewish circles. These implications were not intended by the Tribune, which has no desire to create ill feeling or to furnish ammunition to anti-Semites

BARUCH TO GET AWARD FOR DEFENSE WORK

When the 1950 medals of honor of the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial Association are awarded to Warren R. Austin, American Ambassador to the United Nations; Bernard M. Baruch, financier and elder statesman, and Anne O'Hare McCormick, of "The New Yorrk Times" editorial board, the award will go to Mr. Baruch for his work in behalf of national defense. He was cited for his vision between World Wars I and II when he consistently urged "a framework for industrial mobilization in case of war, a two-ocean Navy, stockpiles of strategic materials, air-power and tanks." His work in World War II, represented "a new level of international statesmanship," and after the war, as American representative on the U. N. Atomic Energy Commission, he presented a plan to defend the world "against ultimate, irresponsible power."

health and constructive citizenship, was described.

One program financed by $17,500,000, of which the committee and the Israeli Government each contributed $7,500,000 and the International Refugee Organization $2,500,000, is already aiding 2,500 in Israel in what is called the "hard-core" category, according to Charles Passman, Committee director in Israel.

It is hoped that the program, known as "Malben," will be caring for 2,000 more persons before the middle of 1951. The program has made possible the emigration to Israel from Europe of large numbers of sick, aged and incapacitated persons whose departures had been held up by lack of facilities to care for them once they arrived in Israel. It has also helped many already in Israel to become assets to themselves and their community.

Only 300 beds were available to tuberculosis patients before the program got under way. Now 500 beds are available and by the end of 1951 the total should reach 2,000 beds.

thousands acres of barren hill country productive. Thus, it would contribute to the Government's aim to make the country self-supporting in food by 1953.

The advantages of the program, however, will not be only economic. Security is as important a consideration. Galilee is faced by Jordan on the east and Syria and Lebanon on the north. The Jerusalem corridor — the capital's lifeline to the coast — is flanked by Jordan positions.

By populating the underdeveloped, underpopulated hill regions and covering the barren slopes with millions of trees and networks of roads, these exposed areas would be made more defensible.

on their record of national leadership in the United States.

Concerning a possible sacrifice of income by these 6,000 persons while they were in Israel, Dr. Wohl proposed that the United Jewish Appeal reimburse them by paying the difference between what they earned normally in the United States and what they would receive in Israel.

Dr. Wohl is the national chairman of the National Assembly for Labor Israel, a past national president of the League for Labor Palestine and chairman of the Commission for Information for the World Hebrew Congress. He has been a delegate to the World Zionist Organization conventions for the last twenty years and has traveled extensively in Europe, South America and Palestine.
